

1. Beefeater

Discovery Classic 3-Burner | $799

For those living in apartments, or in confined spaces, this is about as big as you would want to go. A 3-burner that gives you enough hotplate room to cook meat and two veg, or if you're a true carnivore, pack on the spare ribs, steak and sausies. A zinc-coated finish will help keep the elements at bay.

2. Beefeater

Discovery 6-Burner Outdoor Kitchen | $2,999

If you're about to refit your kitchen, forget about it. Turn it into that fourth bedroom, or play room for the kids. Beefeater's Deluxe Outdoor Kitchen comes with everything, including the kitchen sink. With six burners, stainless-steel cabinets and enough extras to put your kitchen to shame, this beauty is for the kind of person who loves a party while cooking for the masses.

3. Grand Hall

Neil Perry T-Grill | $999

With a space-age look and designer cool, the T-Grill is one freaky looking unit that gets the job done. Its dual ceramic infrared burners are capable of producing up to 24,000 BTUs (British Thermal Units), but can be turned down for slow cooking. Other features include porcelain-coated, cast-iron grates, doubled-walled insulated lid, and stainless-steel appointments.

4. The Big Green Egg Company

Big Green Egg | $995

You'd be forgiven for thinking this little unit comes from the set of an Akira Kurosawa movie, and you wouldn't be too far wrong. Based on the traditional Japanese Kamodo, the Little Green Egg is an all-in-one smoker, grill and oven. Its space shuttle-developed ceramic construction keeps heat in and keeps food moist, while the outside surface doesn't get as hot as its steel-made counterparts.

5. Everdure

E7 | $4,600

E7 is the premier model in Everdure's E range, and comes with the series signature eSee lighting system situated at the top of the range hood, so you can see whether your steak is medium rare or well done.

Add a removable hot plate where you can put a wok, a pot or a pizza stone (that's right, I repeat, a pizza stone!), and you have the modern equivalent of at-home al fresco dining nirvana.
